LADIES

Our primary focus will be on providing tips specifically geared toward women. This is because matchmakers tend to approach and work with men and women differently. Therefore, the strategies employed by women when engaging matchmakers are different from those employed by men.

CREATE THE ULTIMATE LIST OF MATCH MAKERS

Begin your search for matchmakers in your vicinity by utilizing Google search.

Use relevant keywords like
“(nearest big city) matchmaking service”

For example, “Orange County Matchmaking Service” or “Miami Matchmaking Service”

Here are some we recommend.

US, Canada, UK, Dubai:

Cinqe.com (obviously, this is us, we are worldwide)

East Coast:

Agape Match

Lisa Clampitt Matchmaking

San Francisco:

Shannon’s Circle

Los Angeles:

Perfect 12

Three Day Rule

Create a list of all the options that seem appealing to you.

JOIN THEM ALL

Don't be overly concerned about finding the "perfect" matchmaker. Instead, focus on casting a wide net and reaching out to anyone who seems like a good fit. Since you won't be financially invested yet, it won't cost you anything to explore various options. You can always choose to discontinue the connections if they don't pan out. At the outset, it makes sense to remain open and flexible.

REQUESTING A CALL

We strongly suggest visiting the FAQ page on their website, where most common queries are already addressed. Please avoid reaching out to them asking for a phone call solely because you prefer not to conduct your own research.

We encourage you to thoroughly review their site before making any call requests. And when you do wish to speak directly, it's important to mention the agenda of the call - avoid vague requests like,

"Can someone call me, I have questions."

It's quite possible that the answers to your questions are already available on their website.

TIP: Most matchmaking firms operate with a very small team, making it not possible to accommodate every call request.

Most matchmaking services offer free registration for women.

We strongly advise not to request a call with them to discuss becoming a premium-paying member. Although you might think that our goal is to get singles to pay for our matchmaking services, we prefer men to be the ones paying instead. We advise women to invest in coaching first before requesting to upgrade their membership. We recommend saving your money, signing up for every database available, taking great photos, and building friendly relationships with all matchmakers.

Following these guidelines will give you the best chance of success.

THE TRUTH

When a woman pays for matchmaking services, it can disrupt the traditional dynamic of dating, which typically involves men taking on this role. This can be uncomfortable for some men who prefer a more traditional approach to dating.

Please note that we do occasionally accept premium female clients; however, our fees are quite high and primarily designed for affluent women who prefer to outsource and maintain discretion in their dating life.

Most matchmaking services have a section to join their free database via their website. Take your time to complete every question they ask. Write your answers as though your match will read your responses. This is a VERY important tip.

Example of what NOT to write in the ABOUT ME section,

“Hi matchmakers, please help me! I am a good catch and want my man now! He needs to be very successful and tall.”

Examples of what to write instead,

“My friends describe me as kind-hearted, witty, and adventurous. I have a passion for cooking, which is reflected in my personal and professional life. In my free time, I love exploring new places on vacation, trying new restaurants, and being outdoors.”

If the matchmaking service doesn't have a join page on their website, use this template email example instead.

“Hello Matchmakers! I found your agency online, and you seem to do great work. I am Jane Smith, and I am interested in joining your free database to be potentially matched with your premium male members. Could you provide information on how I can submit my details and photos? I completely understand that by joining your free confidential network I am not guaranteed a date. Thank you for your time and consideration!”

Create a comprehensive spreadsheet that includes the website, login details, contact information, and the date of your last interaction with each matchmaking service. See page 23, we started this for you!

Maintain a document that records your responses to their questions. For instance, when asked to describe yourself, write in a manner that assumes your potential match is reading it. However, ensure that you only talk about yourself and avoid mentioning anything that might turn off your match.

Similarly, when asked to describe your ideal match, stay positive and open-minded, and write as if the person you're seeking is reading it. Avoid phrases such as "Seeking rich and tall," which could discourage your matchmaker from considering you.

Instead, consider phrasing it like this: "I am seeking a smart man who is willing and ready to invest time in a meaningful relationship."

Please note that mentioning wanting a wealthy match is unnecessary as all matchmakers only have successful clients.

DEALBREAKERS

It's best not to be overly picky when it comes to accepting potential matches from a matchmaker. If you continually turn down clients for no valid reason and appear too selective, the matchmaker may choose to archive your profile and inform their team that you are not worth reaching out to.

NO GUARANTEES

Regrettably, the truth is that high-end matchmaking firms only accommodate a limited number of clients, and there is no guarantee that you will secure a date with one of these gentlemen.

Kindly abstain from sending email communications to the firm with messages such as, "I haven't heard from anyone," as this is considered distasteful.

If your aim is to capture their attention, we recommend composing a more refined message, such as:

"Dear Ladies, I have finished filling out the application and uploaded my photos. I have attached two images to this email for your consideration. Please do consider me for your outstanding bachelors. Wishing you a splendid day."

PHOTO TIPS

- Smile with teeth
- Full body photos
- Form fitting clothes

"I cannot emphasize enough how crucial quality photographs are for your dating endeavor." - Christiana Maxion

Having great photos is important to the matchmaking process.

Therefore, it's essential to get photos taken as soon as possible. You don't necessarily need a professional photographer, but you must ensure that your images are clear and of high quality.

Next time you dress up, ask your girlfriend to take some pictures of you. There are three rules to follow when taking good dating photos. Firstly, make sure you have full-length photos. Avoid cropping them, as this can give an incomplete view of your appearance. Secondly, wear form-fitting clothes so that your potential match can get a clear idea of your physique (men do not want to play a guessing game with your clothes). Lastly, remember to smile with your teeth in the pictures as this can make you appear approachable and friendly!

When a matchmaker reaches out to you with a potential match, it's crucial to say yes enthusiastically. Even if he is not the perfect man on paper for you, remember that your matchmaker wants to support and promote you. If you turn down too many potential matches, your matchmaker may lose interest in working with you and might even remove your profile from their free database.

TIP: Unsure if he is a match for you, ask your matchmaker questions about him!

When approached by a matchmaker with a prospective match, avoid going radio silent while you deliberate over the decision. This forces the matchmaker to spend unnecessary time following up, only to discover you've chosen not to meet the suggested match. This not only strains the matchmaker's resources but also paints you as unreliable. If the match doesn't resonate with you, promptly respond to the matchmaker's email, thereby respecting her time and effort.

When you receive an email from the matchmaker suggesting a potential match, and you decide not to proceed, it's essential to not simply respond with "pass". Instead, take a moment to articulate your reasons for not wanting to meet the proposed match. This feedback is invaluable, as it assists the matchmaker in refining future matches to better align with your preferences and expectations.

When the date happens, make sure to show up on time and be reliable. Even if the date doesn't go as planned, your matchmaker will appreciate feedback and consider you more seriously if you come across as genuinely interested in finding love and being proactive in the process.

Remember, if you say no to a match without valid reasons, it's likely that you'll miss out on other opportunities with that matchmaking agency. So, always strive to maintain a positive attitude and be open-minded about the people they suggest. Remember to always thank them for thinking of you!

SAY YES TO YOUR MATCHMAKER

FIRST DATES

Congratulations, you're on the date! It could be a call, video, or an in-person date with your match. To make a great impression, it's important to be classy, punctual, and sweet. Avoid drinking too much and refrain from talking about your ex.

Instead, bring positive energy and enthusiasm to the conversation. Laugh at their jokes and compliment them by telling them they look handsome, even if they're not precisely your type. Prior to the date, your matchmaker will send you a list of dating tips and a waiver to sign.

AFTER THE DATE

It's not going to a second date, which is totally ok!

It's perfectly fine if there won't be a second date. Rejection is a natural part of the dating process, whether you're the one rejecting them or they're rejecting you.

After the date, it's essential to let your matchmaker know how it went. Try sending them a message that same night or the next morning, thanking them for setting up the date and letting them know that you appreciate the effort. Here's an example: "Hello Sally, I had a lovely time with John. He was kind and handsome. Unfortunately, I didn't feel any chemistry, and I'm not interested in going on a second date. Thank you so much for thinking of me. I am happy to give more confidential feedback if needed. Please keep me in mind for future matches."

Remember, it's important to show gratitude and avoid being pushy. Please refrain from asking your matchmaker, "Who else do you have for me?" as it may come across as overly demanding when you are not a paying client. This is a major turn-off to your matchmaker.

If your matchmaker kindly asks for confidential feedback to help them do their job better, it's essential to provide honest and detailed feedback. This will allow them to help coach him to improve his dating skills.

FIRST DATES

AFTER THE DATE

So, your date went wonderfully! Presuming you're dating in the US, UK, or Canada, your matchmaker will have facilitated the exchange of numbers between you and your match. Your match will initiate further communication and arrange the second date. After your date, please send an email to your matchmaker, expressing your enjoyment and your interest in seeing him again. Your matchmaker will inform you if he did not consider the date perfect, or if he intends to meet you again. Please note that your matchmaker won't arrange the second date.

You are always welcome to update your matchmaker on any developments in your relationship. For instance, if by the 3rd date you decide not to see him again, your matchmaker can assist in handling that situation.

Remember, your matchmaker is always available to provide help, so feel free to reach out for dating tips and advice at any time!

"As a matchmaker, it's a joy to connect with single women who enter our database. Their responses glow with kindness, their excitement for new romantic journeys shines, and their reliable nature builds trust. Their insightful post-date feedback is the cherry on top, making my role as a matchmaker immensely gratifying."
- Rachel London

I understand that all of this information can be overwhelming, but if you're looking to date high-quality men, consider this your ultimate guide. Print it out and save it for future reference. You may even want to share it with a newly single friend or family member who might find it helpful.

Last but not least, it's crucial to keep your photos and details up to date. If you relocate to a new city, make sure to update your information by contacting your matchmaking agency and requesting an update. You can also upload fresh new photos to keep your profile current and appealing.

Additionally, it's a good idea to follow the matchmakers you like on social media and support their business. This helps you stay connected with the latest trends and updates in the matchmaking industry, and you might even come across exciting new opportunities.
